A WRITER'S READER

Introduction: Reading to Write 439

23. Families 440

- Christy De'on Miller, Give Me Five More Minutes 441
The mother of an American marine killed in Iraq reflects on her loss.

- Amy Tan, Mother Tongue 445
A Chinese American writer examines the effects of her mother's imperfect English on her own experience as a daughter and a writer.
- Anna Quindlen, Evan's Two Moms 451
A Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist examines the controversy surrounding same-sex marriages.
- Anjula Razdan, What's Love Got to Do with It? 453
The author asks whether arranging marriages might be better than choosing mates based on romantic attraction.
- Danzy Senna, The Color of Love 458
The daughter of a white mother and a black father explores the complexities—racial and otherwise—of her relationship with her grandmother.

PAIRED ESSAYS

- E. B. White, Once More to the Lake 463
The author reflects on the impact of taking his son to visit a favorite scene from his own childhood.
- Nancy Gibbs, Free the Children 470
A mother writes in favor of giving her children the freedom to savor summer days.

24. Men and Women 474

- Robert Jensen, The High Cost of Manliness 475
The author calls for abandoning the prevailing definition of masculinity, arguing that it is "toxic" to both men and women.
- Brent Staples, Black Men and Public Space 479
A black man writes about how his presence affects other pedestrians at night.
- Barbara Ehrenreich, Guys Just Want to Have Fun 482
Although women are now more likely than men to earn a college degree, a shift in corporate culture is continuing to favor men in the business world, the author argues.
- Dave Barry, From Now On, Let Women Kill Their Own Spiders 485
By identifying with the frustrations of both men and women, this humor columnist pokes fun at the inevitable miscommunication between the genders.
- Evelyn F. Murphy, Why Not a Dollar? 488
Women's earnings aren't catching up to men's; in fact, the gender wage gap is actually widening, the author contends.

PAIRED ESSAYS

Noel Perrin, A Part-Time Marriage 494

This writer takes a wry look at post-divorce arrangements and current ideas about marriage.

Judy Brady, I Want a Wife 497

Considering the hard work of a wife leads the author to an unusual conclusion.

25. Popular Culture 501

• Tara Parker-Pope, Custom-Made 502

The author analyzes how global brands adapt their products to suit local tastes worldwide.

• Ruth La Ferla, Latino Style Is Cool. Oh, All Right: It's Hot 506

A reporter explores the proud expression of Latino heritage and culture through fashion.

• Stephen King, Why We Crave Horror Movies 512

A popular horror fiction writer examines why people enjoy being frightened.

• Michael Abernethy, Male Bashing on TV 515

This television critic finds that the increasingly negative portrayal of men on sitcoms and commercials is no laughing matter.

PAIRED ESSAYS

James Poniewozik, Why Reality TV Is Good for Us 520

The author extols the virtues of this often-criticized but popular television genre.

Terry Golway, A Nation of Idol-Worshippers 525

The writer laments America's obsession with the cult of celebrity, which is fueled in large part by shows like American Idol.

26. E-Technology 529

• Harvard Magazine, Creating Community, Online and Off 530

Blogging builds community among a university's students and faculty, according to the institution's alumni magazine.

• David Gelernter, Computers Cannot Teach Children Basic Skills 536

A prominent computer scientist challenges the widely held view that computers are always a "godsend" in the classroom.

• Steven Levy, From The Perfect Thing 540

The author asks, "Has the iPod destroyed the social fabric?"

• Merrill Markoe, Who Am I? 542

A comedy writer and author offers a humorous take on online personality quizzes.

PAIRED ESSAYS

Alex Koppelman, MySpace or OurSpace? 546

A journalist reports on privacy concerns raised by cases in which students have been suspended from school or arrested based on their postings to social networking Web sites.

Sherry Turkle, How Computers Change the Way We Think 552

A psychologist explores how technologies such as online chat, PowerPoint, word processors, and simulation games are radically affecting our "habits of mind."

27. Education 560

• Tamara Draut, What's a Diploma Worth, Anyway? 561

In today's economy, a bachelor's degree doesn't mean what it used to, the author argues.

• Susan Brady Konig, They've Got to Be Carefully Taught 564

An event at her daughter's school prompts the author to question the emphasis that many schools place on teaching cultural diversity.

• William Zinsser, The Right to Fail 567

As much as society does not want to admit it, failure is an important aspect of human experience, the author argues.

• Richard Rodriguez, Public and Private Language 571

The author, the son of Spanish-speaking Mexican American parents, recounts the origin of his complex views of bilingual education.

PAIRED ESSAYS

Annie Dillard, From An American Childhood 577

A poet and essayist recalls a childhood epiphany that guided her throughout her education.

Carl T. Rowan, Unforgettable Miss Bessie 580

A journalist tells the story of a teacher who had a lasting impact on his life and on his view of himself.
