Acknowledgments

For over 30 years I've read with pride and pleasure the acknowledgments authors have addressed to my agent, Susan Ginsburg. The descriptions have a pattern: supportive, tough, fair, funny, creative, loyal, persistent, brilliant, even Superwoman. I repeat them all with emphasis and add my own: beloved. Thanks for kicking me in the pants until I wrote this thing.

I also thank Susan Webman and our four wonderful children, Anna, Rachel, Aaron, and Josh, for contributions to this effort that are as varied as they are.

Many colleagues at OppenheimerFunds have contributed ideas both broad and detailed to the book. I hope I've done them justice. I particularly want to thank Brian Levitt, Lori Heinel, Ashley Felden, James Mehring, Tim Horsburgh, Sarah Beaumont, Sarah Busch, Eliot Walsh, Diane Frankenfield, Ari Gabinet, the Global Equity team (who will recognize the influence of their MANTRA), Alice Fricke, Mike Quinn, Jodi Rabinowitz, Jim O'Connell, and Erin Brunswick, as well as Marty Willis for her support of the project. Bill Glasgall generously contributed both his financial knowledge and his editorial skills to the final manuscript. Leonard Mlodinow rescued me from several errors in physics, demographics, and logic.

Leonard Ginsburg has given me many things more important than help for this book, but in this context I thank him for always helping me see financial issues from a practical, human perspective.

I also thank my John Wiley & Sons editors, Debra Englander, Tula Batanchiev, and Kimberly Bernard, for their contributions to the project. Many others will recognize their thoughts represented and no doubt misrepresented throughout. I thank all of them. Finally, many thanks to Susanna Margolis, whose insights, clarity, and perseverance made her help with the manuscript invaluable. Any errors and omissions are my own.
